My Perspective

An end-of-career interview with David Moore on work, family and career education

In this interview, David reviews his life and development as a career college leader, reflects on the founding of Corinthian Colleges, and offers some observations on the current state of the career college sector. p. 1

A Brief History of Career Education Policy & Politics

by David Moore, Retired Founder and CEO, Corinthian Colleges, Inc.

David has entertained career college audiences around the country with his unique observations on the development of career education public policy in America. As he puts it, it was intended to “buck them up” and give them perspective. This history offers a perspective you probably won’t find anywhere else! p. 9

Corporate Ownership Rough on Those Left Behind

Former Exec Recalls Difficult Times

Experiencing the transition to corporate ownership is often stressful, and, for the veteran school director we feature in this report, one that left him questioning the future of the sector and the values that some of the new ownership groups bring. p. 13
